

Root of Silence

Astrid Cabral

Translated by Alexis Levitin

Astrid Cabral is a leading poet and environmentalist from the Amazonian region of Brazil. She is the translator of Thoreau's Walden into Portuguese. Recent collections of her poetry include The Anteroom, Gazing Through Water, Word in the Spotlight, Intimate Soot, and Cage (second expanded edition). Her poems have appeared in Pleiades, Runes, Sirena, Amazonian Literary Review, Bitter Oleander, Catamaran, Cincinnati Review, Confrontation, Dirty Goat, Evansville Review, Per Contra, Poetry East, Poets at Work, and Osiris. Her book Cage, Amazonian animal poems translated by Alexis Levitin, appeared from Host Publications in July 2008.

Alexis Levitin has published forty-four books in translation, mostly poetry from Portugal, Brazil, and Ecuador. In addition to three books by Salgado Maranhão, his work includes Clarice Lispector's Soulstorm and Eugenio de Andrade's Forbidden Words, both from New Directions. He has served as a Fulbright Lecturer at the Universities of Oporto and Coimbra, Portugal, The Catholic University in Guayaquil, Ecuador, and the Federal University of Santa Catarina, in Brazil, and has held translation residencies at Banff, Canada, Straelen, Germany (twice), and the Rockefeller Foundation Study Center in Bellagio, Italy.

Root of Silence

From where does silence erupt? From what entrails alleys corners squares avenues?
With what balance of hours already lived does it reach me through my markings and my memories?
From what sleepy mornings does it come, a left-over wisp of dream within the pillowcase?
In what cistern, deep well, or lake does silence live, pregnant with speech, the apparition of a word in rags?
In what inhospitable womb is it engendered, the voiceless fetus floating in the breeze, mute rhyme that never comes into a poem?
From where does the gag of silence spring, sealing my mouth from speech?
From where does the sharpened sword of silence come, that already in my throat slits my very word?

Coelacanth

Poetry?
Coelacanth chant.
Fossil fish
swimming silent in the darkest depths.

Poetry?
Muted song
for muted ears
in the midst of idiotic background noise.

Poetry?
Song of the mad revealing without fear
a secret,
an apparition.

Silent Language

The word of the deaf-mute nestled in the gaze flows discreet, unspoken, never behind back or shoulder blade.
And so it casts its filaments, weaves and interweaves warp, woof, weft, and gets to join in the general game.
The word of the deaf-mute ignores the gift of sound and relies on a subtle dance.
Ethereal design of fingers the casting of arms in arcs a face of expressive features reveal all that is hidden.
Not every word is born in the hollow of the throat, the space between the lips.
Many spring to sight from the signs of an entire body.

Gaze of the Poet

A gaze to pierce through dust skin pores
 clothes and walls.
 A gaze to tear off scales and masks.
 A gaze to guess the coming rain
 from the cloud of now.
 To see green pastures
 beneath bright snow.
 To discern in the lake
 the millenary glacier.
 To sense in the island
 the submerged mountain.
 A gaze that casts itself beyond the present, seeing in the egg the bird, in the bird the flight.

So Many Words

So very many words and not one to embrace the strangeness of the soul.

How to clothe vague desires or strip bare secrets, prisoners of silence.

Turgid nocturnal heart far from the threshold of dawn sustains a dark silence.

Will there be a term to help on the path to the absurd adventure of bathing in pure light?

A Certain Kingdom

To open a book
 and read it is simple.
 Who says?

Without a fuss
 a certain kingdom
 takes its place.

From the printed page rise walls
 and iron gates.

A universe is founded where time advances or draws back by centuries.

While out there
 the rest of the world evaporates

no thunderbolt breaks the silence
 or shakes the island

No matter how daring no invader
 can manage to reach

beneath that helmet of hair and head
 the impregnable place.

The Accused

The whiteness of the paper only fools the careless eye: green forests flourish behind the pallid page.

The verse planted here can it redeem the act of cruelty:
 the pine tree snatched from earth, river, sky?

In the Secret Ocean

We who swim the subterranean waters of a secret sea confront the backs of those who will not contemplate our submerged and humble flow.
 --The professorial gaze reserved for lighthouses on the peaks of hills.

Could There Be Silence

Could there be silence
 beyond the stillness of a pause?
 Could silence be nothing but the absence of language?

Birds, whales, beasts, even man, be still and cleanse your listening.

Blood and sap fulfill as machines record the ritual of on-going life minimal sounds throughout our bodies.

Diminishing and discrete, eternal echoes crawl along in a procession without end.

The constant sound of water spreads with the humor of the winds or throws itself cascading in sudden leaps from the earth.

Flames snap and crackle in the occasional fire and gargle in the gullet of somnolent volcanoes.

And avalanches of snow?
 And the music of the spheres?
 And the residual sounds of that old big bang?

Silence, the illusion of deafness.

Absent from the Feast

Hushed amongst blankets and folds in the sweet cradle of arms and breast the weeping of the baby in the corner of its eye does not extrapolate to the half-open lips.
Now it's the monopoly of silence, what the boy declares to the lovely girl.
Beneath the elegant black mustache love is well able to stir a fire that sparkles more than earrings.
The trembling mouth of the old man gives up a truth that surprises those present.
One can feel it from the expression of the listeners in the curve of raised eyebrows arched over frightened eyes.
What could the group at that moment be thinking that no word reveals to us?
Hypotheses questions fantasies are the legacy of forms speaking in enigmatic and laconic ways.
Photo, sad relic of the ruin of a universe forever submerged.
Where are they gathered, the sounds the words of those infinitely silent figures whose sentence is to gaze at us from the far-off realm of images?
